What records are there before 1907?

The counties were responsible for collecting birth records before July 1, 1907, which was the day that the state took over.

Many counties kept birth registers, where a birth was 'registered' by entering it into a ledger. Some counties also had birth returns, which were single sheets of paper filled out for each newborn. These records only exist if the family came to register the birth. Unfortunately, some people did not register the births in their family with the county, and there are no records for them.

The county birth registers have been microfilmed, and are available at the Washington State Library. They have also been scanned. Some are available on Ancestry.com and some are available for free on Washington Digital Archives. www.digitalarchives.wa.gov/Collections#RSID:5

All of the birth records and indexes in our collection are listed in our online catalog.
www.sos.wa.gov/library/catalog.aspx If you find a title that you would like us to search for a specific name, you can submit a lookup request on our Ask-A-Librarian page. www.sos.wa.gov/library/ask_form.aspx

Washington State Archives

The Archives holds the originals of many of the birth registers and returns. They will be held at one of the 5 Archives branches around the state. Check out the map to locate the correct branch for your county.

How can I find a Washington State birth date?

- The Washington State Library has a Washington State Birth Index for July 1, 1907-1929. The index is listed by the fathers name, not by the name of the child. You can submit a specific lookup request on our Ask-A-Librarian page. Please include the fathers name and a date range, as the index takes up many reels of microfilm. www.sos.wa.gov/library/ask_form.aspx
